significant advances in propagule rearing and dispersion of habitat forming organisms e g oysters seagrasses corals in addition restoration resources are increasingly allocated by governments and or large corporations with the aim to for example fix past landscape engineering efforts that had unintended environmental consequences such investments are being made to i provide jobs for those unemployed during economic downturns ii restore ecosystems destroyed by natural disasters and stressors iii increase coastal defense in response to increased frequency of intense storms and or iv compensate for pollution and development driven habitat degradation conservation practitioners have traditionally been skeptical to invest heavily in restoration at large scales because of the high cost per area 10 000 5 000 000 us ha for coastal vs 500 5 000 us ha for terrestrial systems to replant coastal ecosystems and or the high chance that the restored ecosystems will not live long e g outplanted corals for restoration to be effective and employed as a primary method of coastal conservation at relevant scales we must improve its efficiency lower costs and rapidly share and incorporate advances one crucial step will be to identify when and where restoration attempts have been carried out according to state of art ecological theory and gauge their success another is generating synthesis studies that focus both within and across ecosystems to identify efficiencies adaptations and innovations work that shows theoretical and methodological innovations in specific ecosystems as well as across systems will be critical to pushing all fields of mer forward although there is rapidly increasing interest and investment the field of marine ecosystem restoration is just beginning to undergo synthesis therefore the aim of this research topic is to bring together research contributions to help address this synthesis need provide a spotlight for recent innovations enhance our understanding of successful methods in marine ecosystem restoration and promote integration of ecological sociological and engineering theory into restoration practices
